

Wynn McClenahan Burkett is an executive coach and leadership consultant with broad multi-sector organizational experience. She has worked in investment banking, law, national politics and community-based non-profits. Wynn brings her experience and training to individuals and teams to enhance communication, improve effectiveness, and make the most of their assets and opportunities. She works with executives to develop their natural leadership abilities and to increase their impact and performance in the organization.

Wynn knows the importance of delivering results in environments where the stakes are high and the margin for error is small. She has worked with leaders and facilitated teams in financial services, banking, law, start-ups, publishing, technology, politics and non-profit institutions. She received her certification from the Coaches Training Institute (CTI), where she later assisted in facilitating their year-long international leadership program. She is also qualified as a Myers Briggs provider.

Additionally, she is a community leader who founded the Golden Gate Mothers' Group, a national model for new mothers which now has over two thousands members in San Francisco. She has an AB from Stanford University, a Masters of Public and Private Management/MBA from Yale University. She is a published author. She and her husband live in San Francisco where they are raising three children.
